

Vaccinators Are Responsible for Checking Batch Numbers For “Hot Lots” Before Administering Covid Shots

Dr. Mike Yeadon answered questions regarding the distribution and how many people may be involved in what ingredients are mixed into the “hot lots” of Covid injections.

And Dr Wolfgang Wodarg advised that pharmacists, doctors and other vaccinators are responsible for checking “vaccine” batch numbers, before injections are distributed or administered, to ensure they are not part of a bad batch or “hot lot.” Patients should insist vaccinators check whether the batch is “bad” before agreeing to the injection.

During Session 86 of the Corona Investigative Committee, Dr. Yeadon spoke of his concerns regarding the Covid injections, presented evidence proving premeditation of particular Covid injection batches containing “lethal doses” and more.

This article is the fourth in a series breaking down Dr. Yeadon’s 2-hour 20 min presentation into more manageable chunks for those who may be short of time and unable to watch the full presentation in one sitting. What follows relates to questions the panel asked regarding the “Hot Lots” and analysis done by Team Enigma. You can watch the Team Enigma presentation in our previous article HERE.

We pick up the question-and-answer section beginning with Robin Monotti's second question about Team Enigma's graph regarding patterns in the distribution of the "Hot Lots."

"If this was innocent you would expect that a batch or lot would, on average, to go the same number of states each time ... it might vary a little bit because obviously some states like New York, California, Florida, Texas are very big and others like [inaudible] are quite small ... but obviously you would expect that a batch which is benign would go to the same number of states as a batch that turns out to be toxic – if it was innocent. We need to go and check this, but as of a couple of weeks ago, our findings were: the most toxic batches were going to the largest number of states," Dr. Yeadon said.

Dr. Wodarg highlighted how there is a trick to disguise lethal doses by people having more than one type of injection, for example, AstraZeneca for the first dose followed by a Pfizer injection for the second dose. He also pointed out that the long-term damage from Covid injections is not yet known.

Questions, Corona Investigative Committee Session 86, The Fog Is Lifting, 7 January 2022 (8 mins)

Vivienne Fischer asked how many people would need to be "in the know" for the variations of batches to be prepared and distributed.

"It's rather worrying that it might be a very small number ... the process is fully automated. Once you program what it is you want the machine to make ... when the machine is humming away and manufacturing the gene sequence it looks exactly the same to a supervisor or a shift worker putting raw materials in, or whatever it's making, it looks exactly the same. So, it might be only, it could be as little as one controlling mind for the whole thing, certainly per company," Dr, Yeadon explained.

Dr. Wodarg spoke about where to find the information regarding "bad batches." He emphasised that doctors have a responsibility to look up which are the "bad batches" before administering Covid injections and pharmacists must take responsibility for what batches they have in stock.

He continued by adding that people should ask, before the "vaccine" is injected, whether the person administering it has checked the batch against the database: 'How bad is my Covid-19 Vaccine Batch? – Find out now'
